Dows Prairie...Lilies and And Airplanes Mix

By CHEF SWANERGOFF

Photos by HUMBERT TIMES

Dows Prairie, before the war, was a place of placid beauty, overlooking the Pacific. Gently rolling hills and patches of green vineyards surrounded the town. Undisturbed by the rush of modern life, it seemed as if time had stood still.

Today, Dows Prairie has grown and changed. But even as it has become a part of the modern world, it has not lost its charm. It is still a place where one can find peace and quiet.

Lilies in bloom present a beautiful sight.

A dearful group gathers in Airway Cafe.

Edward Horses holds dog at hilltop house.

Panorama of part of Dows Prairie as viewed from heights on Edward Horses ranch.

SECLUDED LANES AND LOVELY VIEWS ROUND OUT COMMUNITY

By CHEF SWANERGOFF

Photos by HUMBERT TIMES

Dows Prairie's streets are lined with charming homes, each with its own unique character. The homes are nestled among trees and shrubs, creating a sense of seclusion and tranquility.

Some of the houses have porches overlooking the ocean, providing a perfect spot to sit and enjoy the view. The streets are wide and tree-lined, adding to the peaceful atmosphere.

=data on old-timers=

Some of the oldest homes in Dows Prairie were built before the war. These homes are a reminder of the town's history and are a popular attraction for visitors.

The Alfred Reisman ranch has big Live Oak trees.

DATA ON OLD-TIMERS

Some of the oldest homes in Dows Prairie were built before the war. These homes are a reminder of the town's history and are a popular attraction for visitors.

The Alfred Reisman ranch has big Live Oak trees.

Airway Homes look like beginning of a new town.

Two little Brooklyn girls, Audrey Buchanan and Alice Mentus, on transcontinental clipper tour, pause at Airway Heights hotel.

Kibby photographer at Tom Baird house.

Dows Prairie has good, commodious schools.

DOWS PRAIRIE LIBRARY, HUMBOLDT STATE UNIVERSITY

All aboard for San Francisco at Dows Prairie's airfield.

(Continued on page 13)

Other hallmarks of Dows Prairie that are going full blast. The game-like airplanes--a new type of entertainment--are popular with all, and are more than mere novelty. The airport is in plain view, while the Spanish head next to the airport seems to add the necessary excitement.

The John C. H. home and flower garden.

(Continued on page 15, col. 3)