Fort Humboldt--Where Past Glory Meets Present Neglect

GENERAL GRANT, SOLDIER AND PRESIDENT, LIVED HERE--YOU'LL NEVER GUESS IT NOW

by GEORGE R. BISHOP

The young officer arrived yesterday and walked to the front entrance to Fort Humboldt museum. Out of sight of the old commodore building is Fort Humboldt, where the young officer made his first visit to the United States. The old commodore building was the first building to be constructed in this city, and it is where General Grant lived.

Stoutt, the old commodore building, was enrolled in the United States Navy in 1845 as the vessel Comstock. The old commodore building was also the site where the first flag of the United States was raised in this city. The old commodore building is now the home of the Fort Humboldt Museum.

The next day the officer was prepped for the release of the film.

STRATEGIC LOCATION

In addition, the strategic location of the vast ocean, which includes the San Francisco Bay area, makes it the perfect place for an air show. The Bay Area is a major trade center, and the air show will attract hundreds of thousands of people.

SMatter of Opinion

The old commodore building, the last of Fort Humboldt, stands alone on the hill.

Over the radio this morning a reporter for the "San Francisco Telegraph" said, "The weather here is beautiful today and the people are enjoying the weather.
There is a slight chance of rain later in the day." The reporter also said, "The weather here is beautiful and the people are enjoying the weather."
