INDIANS' DOMAIN INCLUDES WEITCHPEC AND TIMBERLAND

The Hoopa before reservation, comprising a beautiful stretch of valley and mountains extending about fifteen miles along the lower Trinity River, and including the confluence of the Klamath and Trinity rivers, was inhabited by the Hoopa tribe of Indians. The Hoopa built their homes around the lake, which is now the site of the town of Hoopa. The high and picturesque ruins, which are located on the lake, were once the homes of the Hoopa tribe. The ruins are a popular tourist attraction, and visitors can explore the ancient structures and learn about the culture of the Hoopa tribe.

The Hoopa high school occupies a prominent position on the campus. The school is well-equipped and staffed, offering a variety of academic programs and extracurricular activities. The Hoopa students and faculty are proud of their new campus.
