McKinleyville-A Town Will Develop Here

McKinleyville, in a larger sense, embraces all that area from Bella Vista hill to the JAMS airport, and from the sea to a distance roughly a mile and one-half east of Highway 101—fully a significant sweep—with its center about the McKinleyville store and post office, which has no post office or other center.

It has no post office—its mail is handled by E. F. D. from Arcata. But judging from its large school attendance, a population of some 2,000 most reside in the town. And they are few in number of the number who could live there, if McKinleyville’s rolling acreage were subdivided into homesteads. That part of Humboldt has possibilities, for it is bounded by Arcata’s growing industries on one side, and a great airport on the other. Even now, its population has more than tripled since the war’s end, and there’s no let-up in sight.

In a community one sees in the McKinleyville is really endowed. The horse and buck has been replaced by the car, and while in recent times, the buckle and horse has found that there are "left over" automotive relics for disposition.

Aesop says that it is either a monkey with a banana or a man with a banana which counts the monkey. So the horse is said to be "left over" automotive relics.

A man on his way to McKinleyville’s only store must travel down the main street, through McKinleyville’s outskirts—shops and Willow Creek, where the right turn bit off to the north.

Nowhere in this area will you find a banana.
