River—the Pioneer West Lives On

NORTHERN Most Community in California Redwood Empire Has Personality of Its Own

By CHERT SCHWARZKOPF
Photographs by HUMBOLDT TIMES

Smith River is the name of a town and valley located on 101 highway, some fourteen miles north of Crescent City, and just over 100 miles from Eureka. Smith River is one of the few remaining communities where the redwood forests still stand. It is also home to one of the oldest physicians in Del Norte county, who practiced in Smith River and other areas. And it is close enough to the coast to be a potential gateway to the Pacific Ocean.

The new Hirsy Westbrook home is outstanding.

The Everett Woodruff house has seen history.

Smith River’s oldest house was built about 1852.

Pescadero Creek school is now abandoned.

The new Hirsy Westbrook home is outstanding.

River is the name of a town and valley located on 101 highway, some fourteen miles north of Crescent City, and just over 100 miles from Eureka. Smith River is one of the few remaining communities where the redwood forests still stand. It is also home to one of the oldest physicians in Del Norte county, who practiced in Smith River and other areas. And it is close enough to the coast to be a potential gateway to the Pacific Ocean.

The new Hirsy Westbrook home is outstanding.

The Everett Woodruff house has seen history.

Smith River’s oldest house was built about 1852.

Pescadero Creek school is now abandoned.

River is the name of a town and valley located on 101 highway, some fourteen miles north of Crescent City, and just over 100 miles from Eureka. Smith River is one of the few remaining communities where the redwood forests still stand. It is also home to one of the oldest physicians in Del Norte county, who practiced in Smith River and other areas. And it is close enough to the coast to be a potential gateway to the Pacific Ocean.

The new Hirsy Westbrook home is outstanding.

The Everett Woodruff house has seen history.

Smith River’s oldest house was built about 1852.

Pescadero Creek school is now abandoned.

River is the name of a town and valley located on 101 highway, some fourteen miles north of Crescent City, and just over 100 miles from Eureka. Smith River is one of the few remaining communities where the redwood forests still stand. It is also home to one of the oldest physicians in Del Norte county, who practiced in Smith River and other areas. And it is close enough to the coast to be a potential gateway to the Pacific Ocean.

The new Hirsy Westbrook home is outstanding.

The Everett Woodruff house has seen history.

Smith River’s oldest house was built about 1852.

Pescadero Creek school is now abandoned.

River is the name of a town and valley located on 101 highway, some fourteen miles north of Crescent City, and just over 100 miles from Eureka. Smith River is one of the few remaining communities where the redwood forests still stand. It is also home to one of the oldest physicians in Del Norte county, who practiced in Smith River and other areas. And it is close enough to the coast to be a potential gateway to the Pacific Ocean.

The new Hirsy Westbrook home is outstanding.

The Everett Woodruff house has seen history.

Smith River’s oldest house was built about 1852.

Pescadero Creek school is now abandoned.