CHRISTMAS 1945 MEANS HUMBOLDT

Christmas, 1945, finds 29 ex-servicemen back at Humboldt. Christmas, 1944, found them scattered all over the globe: at home and abroad, from Yugoslavia to the Philippines, from New Guinea to Leyte, on and in the water, on land, and in the sky.

In Europe, Humboldters were scattered from Yugoslavia to England. In Yugoslavia, Eugene Thomas made a forced landing sometime before Christmas Day. Christmas became a holiday for Gene when a plane dropped some very welcome supplies.

Bert Sanard was one of Humboldt’s ambassadors to the Mainland of Italy back there, Christmas Time, 1944. Though the weather was bad and though he was busy getting the wounded to hospitals, he remembers he had turkey—and turkey, after months of Army rations made Christmas, 1944, a red-letter day for Bert. Dave Mitchell, also in Italy, with the 465th Army, had a good American dinner—but Christmas was a lonely affair and it was cold in Pantinella.

Harold Johnson filled the soft berth of Humboldt’s ambassador to Italy’s Isle of Capri. The food wasn’t so hot, Harold reports, but there was a whole of a ball in the evening and buckets of champagne, and Harold was near the Romans.

In France—at Colmar, Alsace—Chuck Waters spent his third successive overseas Christmas. While he shivered and froze, he dreamed of that warm California sunshine, and even French cognac and German schnapps could not substitute adequately.

Jack Sivert, after THAT number of missions plus, left France Christmas morning on the first leg of his flight home to Los Angeles. Jack began to lose the old Christmas spirit when he got lost in a fog that could have been sliced. As the day passed, Jack spotted himself vacationing on, or in, the cold water of the North Atlantic, but finally, at 8 p.m., he landed on England’s West Coast and celebrated on “dead chicken and a couple bottles of French champagne we snuggled across.”

In England, at Rattlesden, Suffolk, Brad Barnes was briefed for a mission; the mission blew up, so the Squadron celebrated by repairing the barracks’ stove and eating turkey. At Horsam, St. Faith, Dick Roche tried to get something of the spirit of the Day from his can of cold corned beef, but he didn’t get much except a big hunk of loneliness.

In the South Pacific on Christmas Day, 1944, Jack Boiger, of the Merchant Marine, passed out pin-up pictures to the bobby-soxers of Hollandia, New Guinea, and went native on turkey and two cans of beer.

North, in the Philippines, a trio of Humboldters were on Leyte. Although Gene Blackburn spent most of the day in a Jap air raid on the Tanaway Air Strip, he reports the Big Event came in the form of ice cream—the first in a long, long time. Bill Madsen was in an air raid, too, only he was on one of the floating dry docks made in Eureka—consequently safe, and consequently ate turkey. The day was quiet for Les Vaughn at Telegrafo. His outfit arranged a party for the Natives. They came, picturesquely clad in G.I. mattress

MELE KALIKIMAKA!

By Don Karshner

Hi out there, wherever you are. Merry Christmas to you all. We know just how the song “I’ll be home for Christmas” must hit you these days because just a short time ago we felt sure we wouldn’t make it ourselves. But here we are once again back at dear old Humboldt.

It’s great to chat with eleven more of the old gang over cups of coffee in the Co-op. Bill Madsen, Len Longholm, Wally MacMillan, “Sweet Pea” Narron, Doc Womack, Lenny Conry, Les Vaughn, Gene Kempe, Jack Sivert, Dave Mitchell, and Sam Merryman have all checked in since we last reported in a News Letter the names of returned G.I.’s.

So check your points and check your gear to be sure you’ll catch that first ship back to the good old U. S. A. and to all of us here at school when your number comes up.

However, in the meantime, have the swellest possible Christmas wherever you are!!!

FROM ‘ROUND THE GLOBE

“SHORT SNORT” SIVERT WRITES

Fellas, it’s great to be a civilian—but the best part of all is being back in college. I’ve been here a couple of months now, and I’m liking it better all the time.

When you’re sitting around in the mud of some far-off God-torsaken place, college seems a bit trivial and sort of hazy in your memory. Then you get back here, and you are still a bit hesitant because you think you’ll feel a little out of place around a campus. That’s the way I felt at first—that it would be rough going—felt like I’d be a decrepit, old man among a bunch of kids. But it’s not like that at all. Every time I turn around, an old familiar face pops up. There are veterans all over the place—returning all the time.

Everyone treats us swell. The administration appreciates us, and it makes us, in turn, feel like really putting out for them. That makes it easy to get into the swing of things... It’s something worthwhile getting home for.

So hurry home—you guys—Humboldt is getting to look more and more like the old college it used to be, and if we keep it up, we’ll soon be in the majority!

covers. They knocked themselves out on the G.I. entertainment, but the Japs came a-raiding and spoiled the party.

Doc Womack was on Mindoro—at San Jose. The genial Doc enjoyed a dinner of chicken and rice with a Filipino family, followed by an after-dinner air raid for entertainment.

"Things were tough all over that year," philosophized Len Conry, remembering his second Christmas on Tarawa: wind, dust, rain, torpedo-juice cocktails and turkey.

In Honolulu, Merchant Mariner, Edgar Beard, was put up at the Sherman’s Club. "There were hula dancers," he drooled, as sailors drool at such memories. Despite his luxurious berth in Honolulu’s Alexander Young Hotel, Lowell Dale says Christmas 1944 was "stinko".

Len Longholm says it was "just another day" at the Marine Transient Center near Honolulu. Len recalls that there was a special dinner—though he can’t recall what it made—special, but he remembers wishing he were at home. Gene Kempe was on a ship in Pearl Harbor waiting to go to Guam. "There definitely was turkey," Gene recalled, "but not much else."

On the Mainland—in the United States—at HOME—right here in HUMBOLDT COUNTY—Bob Baird was honeymooning, and Francis Waters had become a CIVILIAN and was eating his turkey dinner with his family.

In Southern California Dave Wingo and Don Pfister, lucky stiffs, had leaves from duty to be at their homes for the day, while up north, in Seattle, Ernie Lekay and his wife celebrated their second wedding anniversary. Bob Newcomb had dinner in San Francisco with his wife and young daughter.

Less fortunate were Harold Narron, who was ploughing around in snow 6 feet deep at the Army Air Field near Casper, Wyoming; Leonard Smith, who had just been discharged, spent the day at Highlands, North Carolina; Sam Merryman, a patient at the Great Lakes U.S. Naval Hospital, who recalls midnight mass and the five-dollar bill he got from the Chicago Herald-American; Wallace MacMillan, who had a chicken dinner and loneliness in his Iowa City preflight days; and Kenneth Atwood at Scott Field near St. Louis. "No flight that day," exulted Kenny, "only 'wine, women, and song,—hot diggity!"

That was Christmas, 1944. Christmas, 1945, finds these men at Humboldt—at home. Faculty and fellow students are proud and happy to have them here. Faculty and fellow students also hope Christmas 1945 more than compensates for those other Christmases.
A special Humboldt Message

Christmas 1945

Once again at Christmas time,
Our star is shining down
Upon the town
And men are free to think again of peace,

"Peace on Earth", that man may sow
With hope of harvest--
Know the pleasure of fulfillment--
The ecstasy of liberty,

But Peace without Good Will
Is but a war-lords' truce--
A bitter answer to the boys of earth
Who fought a ghastly war
To win a gallant peace!

"Peace on Earth
Good Will to men"
Of every creed and class and color
If all who rule and all who serve
Could hear the angel chorus--

Then our star
Shining down
Upon our town
Could joyfully proclaim
Victory for all mankind--

"Glory to God in the highest!
On earth, Peace!
Good Will to men!"
