Our Indian troubles have received a new rise. To day we repair again of Indian agpomis and white retaliation. It is a times of war when the red men are agitated to resist, when the white men are agitated to suppress. But before we judge that either party will be able to carry out its objectives, let us consider the evidence from which the account of the independence of the red men is deduced.
The evidence is deficient in many points, and the red men are in a problematic state.
The people of the country have been for a long time affected by the war between the American and the British powers. The former has been successful, and the latter has been beaten. The British have been thwarted in their attempts to establish a foothold in the Far West, and the Americans have been successful in their attempts to expel the British.
The news of this victory has been received with enthusiasm in the country. The people are confident of the success of their cause, and they are ready to face any sacrifice in order to achieve their objects.

One of the most important points of this war is the treatment of the Indians. The red men are in a dif-cult position, and they are in need of our protection. They are not strong enough to resist the power of the white man, and they are in peril of being exterminated.

The Indian tribes are divided in their views. Some of them are willing to forsake their ancestral homes and emigrate to the west, while others are determined to remain and fight for their rights.

The government is aware of the situation and is taking measures to protect the Indians. The President has issued a proclamation declaring war against the British, and the Congress has appropriated funds for the purpose of aiding the red men.

The treatment of the Indians is a matter of great concern. The governmnt is determined to ensure that they are not harmed in any way, and it is taking steps to ensure their safety and well-being.

The Indians are grateful for the support they have received from the government. They are determined to fight for their rights and to maintain their way of life.

The war is a difficult one, and it is likely to be prolonged. The Indians are determined to resist, and the government is prepared to fight.

The outcome of this war is uncertain. Both sides have strengths and weaknesses, and it is difficult to predict the outcome.

The government is taking measures to ensure that the Indians are not harmed, and it is taking steps to protect them.
